BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HOUSE.

THE old house here represented is a quaint specimen of an order of buildings common in the provincial period. Old Josiah Franklin, the father of Benjamin Franklin, was a native of England. He became a respectable soap boiler and tallow chandler in Boston. Benjamin was born on Jan. 6th, 1706. His early youth was spent in learning how to make tallow candles for his father, and "in his leisure moments," we are told, "he was engaged in throwing rubbish into the mill pond." After his father's business became distasteful to him, he entered his brother's printing office on Queen Street.

THE OLD FEATHER STORE.

The Old Feather Store, built by Thomas Stanbury in 1680, stood on the corner of North Street and Dock Square, fronting upon three sides. In the early part of the eighteenth century it was so close to tide-water that the prows of vessels moored in the dock would almost touch the building. The architectural style was quite common in the Netherlands and in the old trading towns of England. The upper stories projected some two feet over the lower story, giving a considerable increase of space to the upper chambers. The building was of wood, the frame being of hewn oak, and the outside walls of rough cement. In this cement there were embedded bits of broken glass and fragments of junk bottles. The date, 1680, was placed upon the principal gable, on the westerly front. From its peculiar shape, the boys in the neighborhood called the building "The Old Cocked Hat," and by that name was it popularly known for years afterwards.

Nearly every variety of trade has been carried on in the building. The Simpsons kept here a feather store; though before that, according to Snow, "the leading apothecary shop of the town was at 'The Old Cocked Hat'." At one time the building was divided into two tenements, each with separate entrances, but during the days when it was in the hands of the Simpsons it was one store.

THE GREEN DRAGON TAVERN.*

THE Green Dragon Tavern, perhaps the most famous hostelry in Massachusetts, was one of the first substantial brick buildings erected in Boston. It was located on Union Street, not far from Hanover Street. A stone tablet on the present business block, 80–86 Union Street, marks its ancient site.

On St. George's Day, 1706, Governor Joseph Dudley, who had come to town guarded by the troops with their swords drawn, dined here in state, and then proceeded to the town house.

In 1709, the birthday of Queen Anne was celebrated by a "treat" given here by the Council to the Governor. This entertainment cost the Honorable Councillors the sum of five shillings apiece.

Undoubtedly, if the secret history of the Revolution were written, it would show that its initiatory movements were largely planned within this "nest of treason." Paul Revere tells us that he was one of a committee of thirty organized to watch the movements of the British: "We held our meetings at the Green Dragon Tavern, and swore not to reveal our transactions to any except Hancock, Adams, Warren, Otis and Church."

The "North End Caucus," having its headquarters at the Green Dragon, was most instrumental in the "Tea plot." An old song of theirs ran as follows:

"Rally, Mohawks! bring out your axes!
And tell King George we'll pay no taxes
On his foreign tea.
His threats are vain; he need not think
To force our wives and girls to drink
His vile Bohea.
Then rally, boys, and hasten on
To meet our chiefs at the Green Dragon."

* The blue Green Dragon plates for sale have been kindly donated by Messrs. Jones, McDuffee and Stratton.

PETER FANEUIL HOUSE.

THIS house, a fine old stone mansion, stood on the Beacon Hill side (now Tremont Street), opposite the King's Chapel Burial Ground. The lot formed the south part of Governor Bellingham's estate. "The deep courtyard," says Miss Quincy, "was ornamented by flowers and shrubs, and divided into an upper and lower platform by a high glacis, surrounded by a richly wrought iron railing. The edifice was of brick, painted white, and over the entrance door was a semi-circular balcony." It is doubtful whether Miss Quincy is right in her statement that the house was of brick, as from papers in the Massachusetts archives we learn that it was spoken of as being built of stone.

The Faneuils were French Huguenots from La Rochelle. Peter Faneuil, the donor of the historic hall which bears his name, was born in 1700. He was the wealthiest Bostonian of his day. He lived in a style worthy of his position as a prince among merchants He had five negroes to wait upon him, and "drove out in a coach with English horses." His cellar was filled with good wine, beer, Cheshire and Gloucester cheeses, and other tempting and palatable foods. He lived only forty-two years, dying suddenly, in 1742, of dropsy. This Faneuil mansion was also the home of Governor Phipps.

LAMB TAVERN.

(WASHINGTON STREET.)

THE present Adams House stands on the ground formerly occupied by the Lamb Tavern, sometimes styled the "White Lamb." Colonel Doty kept at the sign of the Lamb in 1760, though there are records of the tavern's existence in 1746. The Lamb was an unpretending building of two stories, but of good repute in Old Boston. In the early part of this century it was conducted successively by Laban Adams, for whom the house was named, — father of W. T. Adams ("Oliver Optic"), — and by A. S. Adams. The first stage to Providence, advertised July 20, 1767, put up at the sign of the Lamb.

The following is an extract from an early Colonial law in reference to inns and taverns:

"Nor shall any take tobacco in any inne or common Victual house except in a private room there, so as the master of said house nor any guest there shall take offense thereat; which if any do, then such persons shall forbear upon pain of two shillings sixpence for every such offense."

HOTEL PRESTON,

Beach Bluff (Swampscott), Mass.

THIS well known and popular hotel situated on "the edge of the ocean" is now being enlarged to double its former capacity. The new addition will contain many suites of rooms for families with a large number of private bath rooms. Both the new and the old parts of the hotel and its several cottages will be equipped with modern conveniences. All the chambers will be lighted by electricity and the windows screened. The main dining room will be enlarged to seat 300 guests, while the office rotunda and the music room will be also correspondingly increased in size. Besides these rooms, the office floor will contain reception and writing rooms, ladies' parlors, card rooms, billiard and pool rooms for both ladies and gentlemen, a spacious smoking room and a barber shop with lavatories. The engine, boiler, laundry and servants' quarters are to be placed at a considerable distance from the hotel, and out of sight and hearing.

The new Preston will take rank in size, equipment, and in its management with the best of the summer hotels. It has been leased for a term of years to Mr. H. W. Priest, formerly of the Magnolia, under whose able and liberal management during the past season the Preston acquired the reputation of having a cuisine equal to the best of the city hotels. Open from the middle of June to the middle of September. Rooms can now be engaged for next season by addressing Mr. H. W. PRIEST,

TONTINE CRESCENT.

(FRANKLIN STREET.)

The Tontine Crescent was the first attempt in Boston at building residences in blocks. The houses were arranged with skill and good taste, the long line of the crescent being broken in the centre by an archway thrown over an entering street (since called Arch Street), and the sky line being judiciously varied by the superior elevation of the centre building, the upper story of which came to be used as the public library building.

Mr. Charles Bulfinch, the well-known architect, was the designer of the Crescent. The houses were of ample size, and were, for half a century, among the most desirable in Boston. The Tontine Crescent was begun somewhere in the year 1794 (probably). The growth of the city just at that time was not sufficient to warrant the erection of such expensive dwellings. Heavy mortgages, followed by forced sales, reduced Mr. Bulfinch almost to the verge of bankruptcy.

HOME OF GEN. JOSEPH WARREN.

(HANOVER STREET.)

Dr. Joseph Warren, in the latter part of 1770, leased a house belonging to Joshua Green, which stood on Hanover Street, about opposite the head of Elm Street. The site is now occupied by the American House. Warren continued to reside in Hanover Street until the time came when he gave his undivided attention to the preparation for the coming struggle with the mother country. As we all know, he was one of the first Revolutionary heroes killed at the battle of Bunker Hill, 1775. The Warren house represented a style of building very common in New England about 1776, and may therefore be considered a type of the residential architecture in the years just preceding and during the Revolutionary period.

"THE OLD NORTH."

THE SECOND CHURCH IN BOSTON.

(FOUNDED 1649.)

No small part of the history of Boston is connected with this ancient edifice. It was erected in 1677, and in all probability resembled the older meeting house which it superseded. It was provided with bell and clock. The bell was rung at 5 o'clock in the morning, at 1 o'clock (the hour for closing the market), and at 9 o'clock in the evening. The town's powder was stored here for a long time. From the very beginning this meeting house was a stronghold of political liberty; for, as is well known, the Mathers — Increase and Cotton — preached from its pulpit, and their influence largely moulded the thought and customs of the early colony. It was also from this pulpit that Lathrop preached his memorable sermons in 1774. Attention was drawn to him and to his congregation by his patriotic utterance when, on a certain Sunday, he declared that "Americans rather than submit to be hewers of wood or drawers of water for any nation in the world would spill their best blood. . . . Should the British administration determine fully to execute the laws of which we complain, we have yet to fear the calamities of a long civil war."

"THE OLD NORTH."

Strong, frank, treasonable words, these, and the congregation that sat and listened to them deserved, from the British point of view, the epithet, "a nest of traitors." It is not, therefore, strange that General Howe gave willing assent to the desire of "certain evil-minded men of the King's party to pull down the old North Meeting House." That was an end to the "nest," no doubt, but the traitorous hornets came back so stingingly that on the seventeenth day of March, 1776, General Howe himself with his royal army was quite glad to say good-bye to Boston.

SECOND CHURCH IN BOSTON.

We present here two views of the Second Church, the one as it appeared when the building was on Hanover Street; the other as the Church looks to-day. As is well known the British troops evacuated Boston March 17th, 1776, and the Americans, under General Washington, took possession. With a just indignation the former members of the Second Church surveyed the ruin and desolation wrought by the violence of the enemy. Their beloved church, with other buildings in the neighborhood, was utterly destroyed. It happened, however, fortunately for them, that the New Brick Church, at the time, was under an infirm and aged minister, and its congregation reduced in number to a mere handful. Arrangements were accordingly made for the Second Church Society to take possession of the building, and its minister, Dr. Robbins, to be the pastor of the combined congregations. The building, however, still continued to be popularly known as the "New Brick."

"New Brick," Second Church, Hanover Street, Boston. (In use until 1844.)

The brown-stone gothic structure, now known as the Second Church, is (as nearly as two buildings can be one) the same building which formerly stood on Bedford Street. "The church edifice," Mr. Eager tells us in his history, "had been carefully taken down, and the materials stored for their proper preservation. The stones composing its walls were used in building the present chapel and church, the stained glass windows, the pews, the pulpit and the organ were also replaced in the new building. The first Sunday's service in the Copley Square Church was conducted by Dr. Chandler Robbins. The date of dedication being September 17th, 1874."

MAYO-MATHER HOUSE.

THE first regular minister of the Second Church was John Mayo, who was ordained in November of 1655. Although he held the office of Pastor for nearly twenty years, yet little is now known of his personality and work. The records of the church give us one item, however, concerning his funeral which in a few words illustrates, unintentionally perhaps, something of the customs of former days. It is said that "the whole cost of the Rev. John Mayo's funeral was ten pounds four shillings," of this amount nearly four pounds were spent for wine, and five pounds fifteen shillings for gloves. It is hardly likely that Mayo himself occupied the house which afterwards in connection with Mather bore his name, nor is it probable that Increase Mather lived in this mansion, except, possibly, in the closing years of his life. After the disastrous fire of 1676, many excellent buildings were erected, and it seems reasonable to suppose that the Mayo-Mather house was put up in the latter part of the 17th century when a better and more substantial type of architecture commenced to prevail.
